

Practitioner Certificate in Information Risk Management (BCS)

What is it?

An ISO/IEC 27001 information security management system gives you a best practice framework to improve data protection, helping you to remove the threat of security breach. The Practitioner Certificate in Information Risk Management (PCIRM) is designed by the BCS Professional Certifications (formerly ISEB), especially for IT security professionals. It provides guidance based on ISO/IEC 27001 for delivering information security risk management specific to your business.

Why do I need it?

Your business relies on information and the PCIRM is designed to help you protect this information. This course gives you the knowledge to deliver a robust system in line with the approaches recommended in ISO/IEC 27001 and ISO/IEC 27005 standards. And it gives you the skills to keep your company up-to-date with UK legislation and international best practice frameworks – reducing or removing threats specific to your company and customer data.

How will I benefit?

If you understand the scope of the ISO/IEC 27001 standard, you will also understand how it can impact the way you manage your company and customer data – for the better. An information security management system allows you to demonstrate that you have robust data protection policies and processes in place. And this system will be tailored to your business, building customer trust and empowering you to grow and innovate.

What will I learn?

This five-day course will introduce the concept of information security management and reaffirm its importance. You will become familiar with the different stages of an ISO/IEC 27001 management system and become confident assessing the specific risks to your business and their impact. Discover how to put in place effective security controls, analyse business impact, produce risk reports and plan internal information security audits. By the end of the course, you will have a detailed understanding of all the key components of risk management and be able to make a significant contribution to the risk management process.
