

Energy Management training

ISO 50001 Lead Auditor

What is it?

The international standard ISO 50001 Energy Management is regarded by many as the best practice framework to manage your energy performance and address your energy costs. It can also help you to reduce your environmental impact and meet emissions reductions targets. It requires a structured approach towards measuring and monitoring how much energy is used. The standard requires the identification of opportunities to improve energy performance. ISO 50001 also drives technical and behavioural practices in pursuit of energy performance.

Why do I need it?

Whether you already have or wish to gain certification or simply a self-declared system compliant to 50001, then you need to have management system audits, perhaps undertaken by teams. Effective audit practice is an invaluable management tool. It can make sure your ISO 50001 framework keeps delivering the best for your business.

Work with us to gain the skills and knowledge practices of a lead auditor to lead a team to deliver energy management system audits.

How will I benefit?

The way you use energy will evolve with your business – this means your energy management system must evolve too. Keeping track of changes can be identified through good audit practice.

Audits help you to maintain compliance with ISO 50001 as your energy needs change. They also drive the identification of ways to improving energy performance. ISO 50001 helps the management of risks surrounding future energy supply.

Improved environmental credentials can be achieved, cutting emissions and meeting government reduction targets.

What will I learn?

This five-day course will help you consolidate your knowledge of ISO 50001 and help you understand the requirements from an auditor's point of view. You'll learn to take the lead, reporting on audits, and driving continual improvement. Our tutors will explain how to manage audit interviews, and conduct opening and closing meetings.

You'll also become informed for raising awareness of ISO 50001 and leading or managing other teams of auditors in your organization or as part of a second party audit.
