

ISO 14001 revision is underway

ISO 14001, the world's most popular standard for environmental management, is now under review, with an update version due to be available in early 2015.

Two significant actions

The revision has been written using the new high level structure which is common to all new management systems standards. This will allow easy integration when implementing more than one management system.

The second action comes from the 'Future Challenges for EMS Study Group' which evaluated the potential implications of evolving stakeholder expectations and new developments in environmental management systems. The study group analysed eleven key themes along with the obstacles and opportunities to increase uptake of ISO 14001 in small organizations to control environmental impact in the supply chain, engage stakeholders, and communicate externally.

What happens next?

The draft standard is estimated to be available in September 2014. This will be your opportunity to comment on and help shape the standard. The final revised standard should be available February 2015. BSI will keep you updated with progress on the revision and let you know when you have an opportunity to comment. Did you know?

BSI produced the world's first environmental management standard, now ISO 14001, back in 1992.

What our customers say

My aim of aligning the requirements of ISO 14001 to my previous management skills was well served. The pace, depth and range of items covered was just right.

Having attended the introduction course I found this to be the perfect complement and I'm looking forward to starting work on our environmental management system.
